

The delegation spoke in no uncertain terms on the question of female suffrage. They are against it. This bill, having passed the house, they fear it will pass the senate. It may, however, be very safely said, that female suffrage will not pass the senate. The sentiment of the senate is overwhelmingly against the measure. Now that Mrs. Digges has left town for Washington, D. C., comparative quiet on

Ascending Mount Blanc.
The first woman who made the ascent of Mount Blanc was a young French mademoiselle of 22—Marie Paradis by name—who accomplished the feat in 1808. A few years since, Miss Stratton, a brave English girl, made the ascent in mid winter. She is said to have frozen two fingers on her way up, and she fell in love with her guide and married him when she reached the foot of the mountain.

A "CLOSE CALL."

For a few steps when I heard someone run rapidly along on the opposite side of the street.

The person was manifestly very much frightened, for I could hear the quick, rattling cries he gave out as he sped over the wet walk.

For some reason or other I felt strangely and strongly influenced by this occurrence, and instead of passing on—as I would have done upon almost any other occasion—I stood there in the drizzling rain watching and listening to the fleeing figure, though I could hear much better than I could see.

Looking back and following the cries

"We had just struck the head of Williams street, where I left my driver with instructions to stop any cab, and I had run down the street a ways, when I saw a cab about twenty feet away. I rushed on, calling out as loudly as I could, and succeeded in stopping him to find out to my untold joy that it was the very cab you had just left."

"The driver told me that you could be found at the corner store, and thither I hurried."

"There, as you can infer, my joy of the moment before was crushed by the informa-theory and practice, the intestinal canal still remains the battle ground where the score of the gravest disorders is decided.

That many of the remedies are to be found within the range of ordinary food is not a natural when we consider how many of the deadly poisons are derived from the "old women's herbs and simples" which held high place in the modern pharmacopoeia, and conversely some of our every day foods have poisonous properties; for instance, our pleasant, familiar nutmeg, when overused, is a violent poison, and our sweetest wine our custards and hot puddings, is a virulent poison, an entire life being capable of killing a person if

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

CURE FITS!

When I saw this I did not know, merely to stop them for a time and then leave them where they were. I mean medically. I have made the Diagnosis of FITS, EPI-LEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I cannot do merely to cure them. I want cause. But some causes are falling fits or fits means for just some remedies are given. Send at once for a testimony and a Free Outline of Infantile Convulsions. George F. Pritchard and Frank Gifford, Medical Ex.

[illegible]